UNEMPLOYED BENEFIT SCHEME IS ABUSED BY LONDON PEOPLE

LONDON, April 21.—(Canadian Press Cable)—Two cases in London police courts today drew attention to abuses in the working of the unemployed benefit scheme in connection with which there has been an administration of the law.

A man was sentenced in the Tower Bridge court to twenty-one days' hard labor for obtaining the dole under false pretences. He denied having knowledge that his wife was drawing the dole, but she testified that she thought she was entitled to it.

The magistrate was astonished when told that a married woman, under the law, could draw unemployment benefit even if her husband was working, provided she had been previously employed. The magistrate described the position as monstrous and tantamount to an endorsement of marriage.

A man who had left his work at Canterbury and received the dole in London was brought before the Magistrate court. He told the magistrate that he was unable to return to Canterbury because his wife did not like the place. The magistrate remarked that the benefit was not intended to give women the choice of living anywhere they liked.
